it is well known that gender distinctions structure the modern labour market but why is this so and how far back in time does the pattern extend gender work and the transition to modernity in northwestern europe 1720 1880 uses a unique method to map and explain how gender rather than marital status came to be important gender work and the transition to modernity in northwestern europe 1720 1880 investigates how and why the division of work between men and women changed in the transition from early modern to modern society based on the verb oriented method and around 19 000 observations of work activities in historical sources its focus is on a mid swedish local society in the period 1720 to 1880 there were several continuities across this time both women and men were observed in practically all forms of work many households both affluent and destitute still relied on multiple sources of income and the marital partnership continued to be important for what women and men did to support themselves yet there was also change tasks that conferred authority were gradually masculinised the differences between married and unmarried women with respect to work declined and while women remained mobile men s work related mobility increased in an even longer time perspective from 1550 to 1880 gender slowly became more important for what types of work people did the main reason behind this development was increasing social differentiation and shifts in labour relations the growing impact of gender was not the result of a trickling down of new middle class ideals nor the effect of new preferences nor a consequence of a separation of home and work instead differences grew because more people were in a position where someone else an employer controlled how they used their time i can help you learn how to have a better chance of finding property buying it and doing the things necessary to sell it for profit just do what we do here so how it started i was driving to look at a new property a client called me to list in north louisiana i was thinking that this 38 acre listing was right in the sweet spot for the size tracts that many people want for rural home sites in our region i wondered if this tract could be bought at a price where we could improve it and make some money on it just like the well just like the last several tracts i had bought over the last year i had bought personally and occasionally with a couple of partners 12 different deals just like this well not identical deals in size and use but similar in that they were smaller tracts ranging from 12 to 80 acres i d never really considered looking at my buying and selling in a context of time and lumping all the deals together into information that i could pass along to others but this was the idea i just had why not talk about how i do it why not break down some of the steps i take why not explain the things i do to buy and sell a tract for profit the bite sized pieces of information could be useful to others who wanted to do the same i consider myself somewhat of an expert in the rural land brokerage business i mean heck i do own and manage a large regional land brokerage dealing with millions of dollars in listings each year i do know my way around most types of land tracts i haven t however thought of myself as an expert land investor yes i ve been involved in the purchase and sale of thousands of acres and all made money but that s just me doing what i do an expert no something to teach maybe so here it is my steps thoughts and actions on how i managed to buy and sell 12 different small tracts in about 18 months all at a profit there were two large deals one over 1000 acres and another at almost 5000 acres that i was also involved in at the same time those deals are different than the 12 i ll use for discussion here those deals require a different level of funding and knowledge that may be more than you want to tackle so for here we ll focus on the 12 smaller tracts and see what we can learn the following chapters are written in a way that they can be plucked out and used as separate pieces of information that can provide a needed piece of guidance along your way absorb it all as a whole or pick and choose what you want
